classic.txt

Sheets Count: 1 Word Count: 3,606

Read Time: 17 minutes Font Size: 6

Passage 1. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 2. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 3. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 4. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 5. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 6. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 7. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 8. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 9. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 10. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 11. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 12. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 13. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 14. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 15. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 16. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 17. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 18. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 19. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 20. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 21. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 22. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 23. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 24. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 25. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 26. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 27. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 28. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 29. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 30. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 31. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 32. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 33. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 34. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 35. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 36. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 37. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 38. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 39. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 40. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 41. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 42. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 43. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 44. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 45. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 46. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 47. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 48. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 49. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 50. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 51. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 52. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 53. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 54. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 55. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 56. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 57. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 58. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 59. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 60. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 61. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 62. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 63. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 64. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 65. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 66. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 67. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 68. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 69. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 70. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 71. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 72. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 73. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 74. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 75. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 76. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 77. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 78. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 79. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 80. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 81. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 82. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 83. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 84. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 85. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 86. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 87. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 88. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 89. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper. Passage 90. A small book can hold a large journey. The river turned beside the garden, and the travellers stopped to read their map. Every sentence belongs in its original order; every ending deserves to survive the journey onto paper.

FINAL SENTENCE: the lantern stays lit.

THE END